I have always been interested in arts. My studies since I joined college have focused on English language, literature, and translation. I am particularly interested in Comparative Literature, Criticism, and Literary Translation. I had previously worked as an Inline Skating coach before I joined the academic career; which profoundly enhanced my communication and teaching skills. My experiences have taught me how to communicate effectively with people and accept differences. In 2018, I decided to put my talent into effect. I started making the voice-over commentary – in Arabic, as well as in English – of various media content. I also write the scripts I then record. Since my collegiate years, I indulged into freelance translation. I worked on a variety of texts which include financial documents, academic theses and dissertations, as well as feasibility studies. I'm currently working on an English-Arabic translation of a series of books taught in a well-established British institute.
